

The Asia Pacific and Globalization Review

Journal will be launched in November 2011

The Asia Pacific and Globalization Review is a peer-reviewed online journal focused on the challenges and creative opportunities facing multinational companies emerging from the Asia Pacific region.

Published by the MacEwan School of Business, Institute of Asia Pacific Studies (IAPS), major topics include entry modes, international mergers and acquisitions, accounting and taxation practices, marketing approaches, head office location, human resources management, corporate social responsibility, as well as other relevant political and cultural issues.

The Journal publishes two issues annually, May and November, with the inaugural issue available in November 2011. Each issue contains three to five articles, including empirical studies (both qualitative and quantitative), literature reviews, case studies, book reviews, commentaries, and policy papers.

The Asia Pacific and Globalization Review is currently inviting researchers working in related areas to submit articles. For submission and guidelines and other questions, please contact:
