Structure

The purpose of the PDW is to provide feedback to junior scholars and doctoral students on their research projects that are at an initial idea stage of development. Consistent with the mission of JIM, our objective is to encourage scholars to do quality research on topical issues that have high potential to make an impact in the area of international management. While we certainly hope that the authors will develop their work and submit to JIM, there is no obligation to do so.

We invite submissions of short idea papers that are anywhere between 2500 to 5000 words in length. You can submit the shorter versions of papers that you have previously submitted to JIM or other journals to get development feedback during the PDW. The space will be limited to 20 papers.

Session structure:

- 15 minutes: Overview of JIM aims, scope, and performance.
- 60 minutes: Feedback by panelists on selected papers in breakout rooms.
- 15 minutes: Panelists answer questions from the audience.

This PDW will be open for participants who may not submit any paper for feedback. Please visit the following link for updated details about the workshop including the zoom link.
