Contemporary Financial Markets and Risk Analysis

Special Issue Editor:

- Ewa Feder-Sempach, PhD University of Lodz (ewa.feder@uni.lodz.pl)

Deadline for Submission:

ABSTRACTS - May 31, 2024

FULL PAPERS – June 30, 2024

Motivation for the Special Issue

The contemporary financial market becomes more complex to serve a greater number of investors and their risk management needs while allocating capital. As a result of this explosion in financial innovation, new financial products have been developed, generating unfamiliar risks for financial market participants. Analysing the environment requires taking a large number of factors. These factors affect international investors directly and indirectly posing new sources of risk, e.g., GFC (Global Financial crisis) and Covid-19 (Covid-19 economic crisis).

The aim of this special issue is to analyse the selected changes related to contemporary financial markets with respect to risk analysis and to provide a framework for understanding these changes.

Overview of the Special Issue

The focus of this special issue is to provide a deep understanding of contemporary financial markets and risk analysis. Articles submitted to the special issue can address one or several issues within each of these:

- Financial markets
- International finance and monetary policy
- Financial economics
- Mathematical methods in economics and finance
- Portfolio theory
- Risk management and analysis
- Financial technology and innovation
- Sustainable finance
